Cleburne County
Ozark District

Cleburne County is located in northcentral Arkansas. The county seat is Heber Springs. The county has five additional incorporated municipalities including Concord, Fairfield Bay, Greers Ferry, Higden and Quitman and a number of unincorporated townships. It is the last of Arkansas’ 75 counties created.

Although among the smallest counties in Arkansas, the topography is quite varied with mountains to the north and rolling hills in the south. The most significant water features include the Little Red River and Greers Ferry Lake, a 40,000 acre reservoir created by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for Little Red River flood control. Both attract large numbers of visitors to the area and serve as an anchor for tourism, the largest economic driver in the county.

Cleburne County is home to Arkansas State University-Heber Springs. The University initially offered courses in the county through its Beebe campus at Heber Springs High School and Courthouse Annex. In 2000 voters approved a sales tax to build the Heber Springs campus, which began operating in 2007.
