I enjoy playing by myself. I really like playing with other children too. But I like playing with you the best. When I don’t get to play with you I feel lonely and unimportant. I start wondering how I can get you to play with me again.

What I Want You to Know

Children don’t play with me the same way you do. I love it when you are willing to sit on the floor and build a block tower with me. I like it when we wrestle and tickle each other too. One of the most important things you can do to help me grow up to be a good person is to spend fun time with me.

I know you are very busy. There are many things that you want to do. You also feed me, bathe me, and wash my clothes. But I want you to play with me too. Play brings our two worlds together.

Here’s How You Can Help Me

Some people say playing with children is a waste of time. But you’re helping me grow and learn! That’s important! When you take time for me, I learn how to be with people. I can’t learn that from my toys!

A couple times each day, ask me if I want to play. It doesn’t have to be for very long. Tell me stories or read me books. I also love building things, taking walks, and making snacks with you.

When I come looking for you, be willing to spend a few minutes playing with me. Even if you are in the middle of something else, maybe it could wait. I may want to show you the picture I drew, the book I want you to read to me, or the neat tower I built.

Even helping you with some of your jobs is fun to me. I could help you get dinner ready, set the table, plant flowers, or dust the furniture.

When I come to find you, sometimes it means I’m bored or lonely. I’m ready for some one-on-one time with you. If I don’t seem to have an activity in mind, help me out. Maybe you could suggest that we make things with play dough, draw a picture, or throw together a makeshift fort.

It doesn’t really matter what we do. I just like playing with you.
