Chris attended Oxford University in England, studying landscape architecture, landscape principals and philosophy, and also graduated from the University of San Diego with his BA. In 1999, Chris opened Botanica Gardens, a landscape and design company in LR. Last year he opened Plantopia Home and Garden Center in NLR.

Chris has been active in the Susan G. Komen Cancer Foundation—designing and installing the landscape for the “Build for a Cure” Projects in LR and the first “Build for a Cure” house in the U.S. Chris’ designs have been featured in Southern Living, Real Living, and Better Homes and Gardens. His exceptional designs have been the recipient of the People’s Choice Award and numerous other honors the last 10 years.

Chris has been associated with KHTV Ch.11 in home and garden segments in the Weather Garden and also his weekly evening segments of “Today’s Home” with Chris H. Olsen.

Chris is known for his outstanding use of color in landscape and for his use of ‘jhemajang’. ‘Jhemajang’ is Chris’ trademarked verb that means to mix it up by arranging different elements, both garden and unrelated, old and new, in a funky way that brings the pieces together in a whole new light. Chris is your landscape designer with a gift for making art out of flowers and plants.
